Ark. students return, mourn

Associated Press

JONESBORO, Ark. — The first thing they did Thursday at Westside Middle School was disconnect the fire alarm — the same one that lured four students and one teacher to their death in a barrage of gunfire.

Classes resumed with nervous parents taking their frightened children to school — buses were mostly empty — and crisis counselors urging students to talk about their grief and confusion.

Students wore white ribbons as they filed past red and white bouquets that lined the walkway where the victims were gunned down Tuesday. A flowered cross hung from the flagpole, and the flag flew at half-staff.

No lessons were taught, and all outdoor activities were canceled, including recess. Students made cards for the 11 people who were wounded, including the five who remained hospitalized Thursday.

Still, twice as many children as normal in the 250-student school stayed home. Erica Swindle, 12, who watched a friend die, said she wasn't ready to face her demons just yet.

"It scares you real bad," said Swindle. "I could have been shot in the back."

Tristian McGowan, 13, one of the wounded and a cousin of one of the boys arrested, returned with his arm in a sling.

Colby Brooks, 12, said he didn't see the point in putting it off.

"It's just going to be as bad Monday as it is today," he said. "Life goes on, and from there we're going to start a new beginning."

Two students — Mitchell Johnson, 13, and Drew Golden, 11 — are being held on five counts each of murder and 10 counts of battery.

Police say the two, dressed head-to-toe in camouflage and armed with rifles and handguns, ambushed a group of classmates and staff members who had left the school because of a fake fire alarm.

Drew's grandfather, Doug Golden, said Wednesday that his grandson had confessed to pulling the alarm and to stealing guns and ammunition from his house.

Mitchell's stepbrother, Monty, a fifth-grader, didn't go to school Thursday, but his teachers came to his house with a letter from his classmates saying they still liked him and wanted him to return, Monty's father said.

But Terry Woodard said he wasn't ready to send his son back.

"I've been around this town," Woodard said. "These people don't forgive. ... They don't see it that Monty didn't have nothing to do with it. They just see him as Mitchell's brother."

Mitchell's father, Scott Johnson, a truck driver from Minnesota, said Thursday that his son had expressed remorse.

"My son is not a monster," he told "NBC Nightly News" and ABC's "World News Tonight."

"I don't have an explanation for any of this. Nobody does," he said.

Before students arrived, high-powered spray guns were used to clean the walkway of blood, and the fire alarm was turned off.

Principal Karen Curtner acknowledged the issue of balancing fire safety against the fears of students if the alarm went off would have to be addressed. But she said she ordered the alarm shut off "so we wouldn't have any of those problems today."

The day began with an hour-long counseling session in the cafeteria. Counselors paid particular attention to the class of Shannon Wright — the teacher who was killed protecting one of her students.

Her pupils asked "very good questions about what are we going to do, and that's going to be difficult," said Scott Poland, a psychologist with the National Organization for Victim Assistance.

"And we talked in terms of how important it is for children to express their emotions," he said.

promises. "We've taught personnel how to be good listeners and to be aware of subtle hints that a student is in trouble or contemplating anything that could pose a problem," Seastrand said.

Some measures Alpine School District has in place include a close association with the local public safety department and a zero-tolerance policy when a student is found with a weapon.

Police provide security in many of the high schools in the area, and any student who breaches the weapons policy faces suspension or even expulsion from the school, he said.

"Our goal is to enhance safety in our schools," Seastrand said. "If we are ahead of the game, we can avoid the problems."

Representatives from local school districts expressed their sense of loss and condolences to the families of those who were killed or injured in the Jonesboro shooting.

"Any time a tragedy happens dealing with children and schools, it is a very devastating experience for us," Seastrand said.

"Even though it happened in another state, there is a sense of loss. We feel a lot of empathy for what happened to the victims."

"Our hearts go out to them," he said.

5 Rwandan students killed

Associated Press

KIGALI, Rwanda — Marauders attacked two schools in northwest Rwanda, killing five high school students at one and looting the other, authorities said Thursday. They blamed Hutu rebels.

The looting occurred Wednesday while President Clinton was in the capital, Kigali, promising to help Rwandans bring stability to their country, which is recovering from a 1994 genocide.

The five students were slain Tuesday, said a local official, who would not give his name.

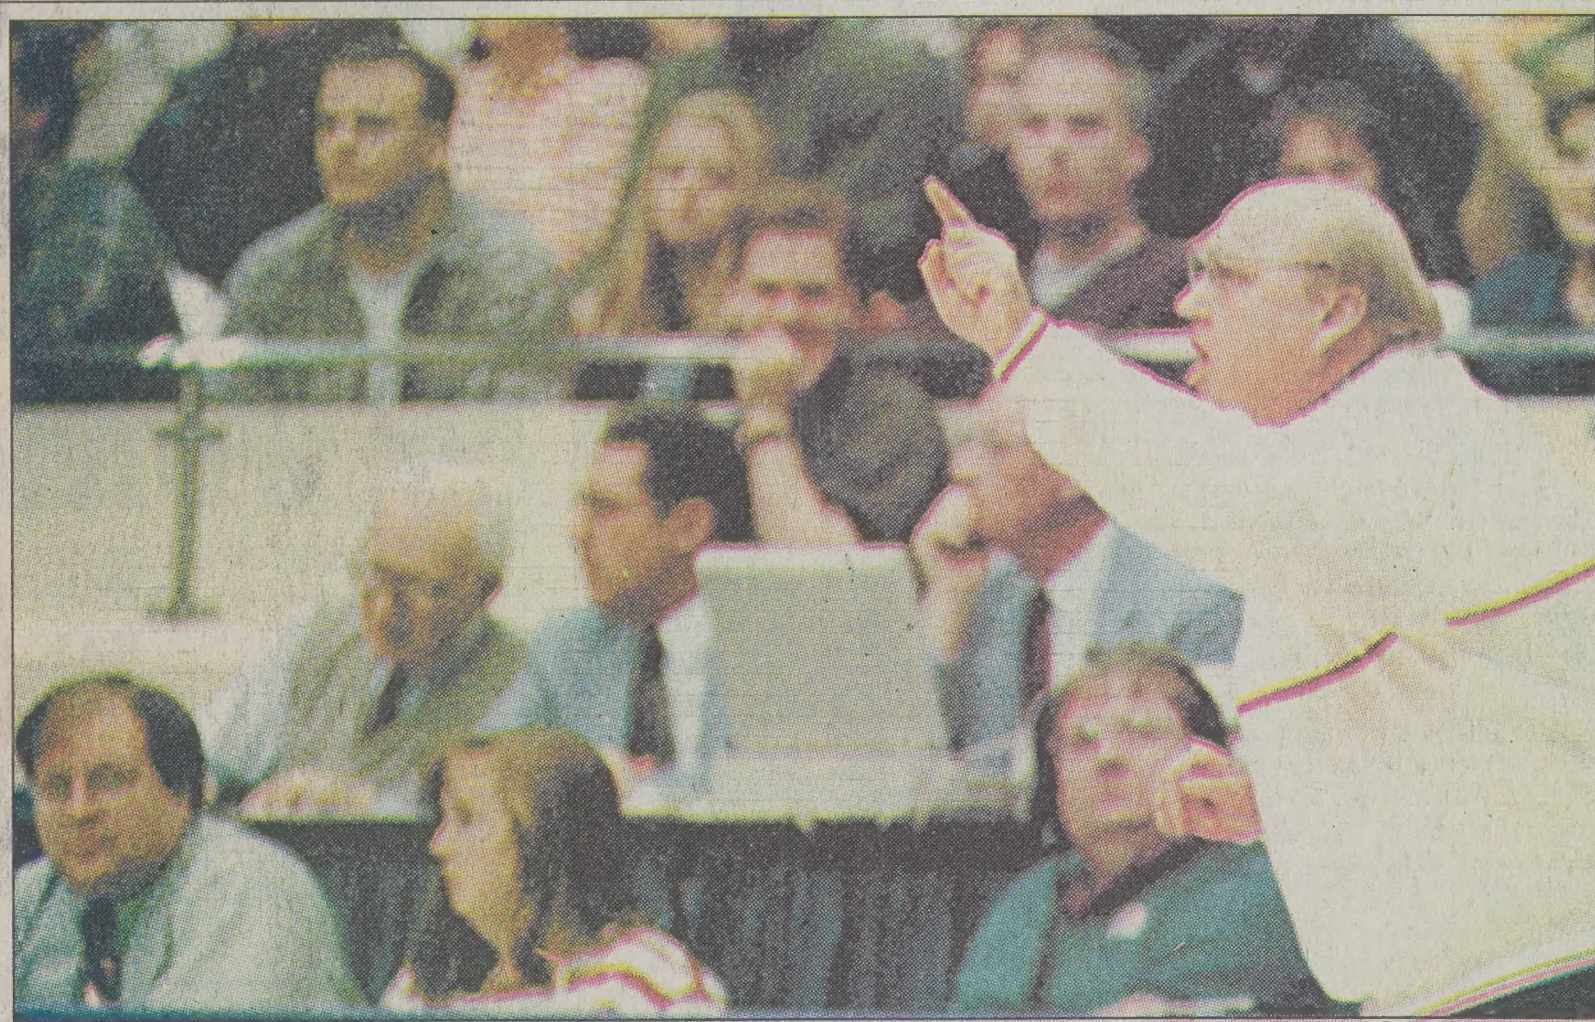

The attacks were in neighboring villages about 55 miles northwest of Kigali, a Hutu stronghold where Rwanda's Tutsi-led army has been battling intensifying rebel attacks.

Monday, the rebels attacked near Ruhengeri, killing 20 people and taking two Spanish Roman Catholic nuns hostage, apparently to care for their own wounded.

Most of the rebels took part in Rwanda's 1994 slaughter of a half-million Tutsis and moderate Hutus. Tutsis won power and stopped the killing that July; thousands more Rwandans have died in rebel attacks and army reprisals since then.

The rebels have stepped up attacks since November 1996.

Clinton said the United States would contribute $2 million to a genocide survivors fund and promised an additional $67 million to promote Rwanda's crippled justice system.

Utah coach Rick Majerus calls out a play as the Utah Utes beat BYU at the Marriott Center Jan. 10. Majerus says that leading the Utes into the Final Four is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for him. The last time the Utes were in the Final Four was 1966.

Debut for Final 4 coaches

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Kentucky and North Carolina regularly reach the Final Four. Stanford and Utah haven't been there for decades.

All four teams, however, have something in common: They have a head coach leading a team into the Final Four for the first time.

"For me, it's probably a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," Utah coach Rick Majerus said. "I'm so thrilled for our players and our university, the city of Salt Lake and the state of Utah."

The Utes (29-3) defeated defending champion Arizona 76-51 to reach the Final Four for the first time since 1966. Utah faces North Carolina Saturday in the Alamodome.

Kentucky meets Stanford in the other semifinal. The winners play Monday night for the championship.

Tubby Smith, who took over as Wildcats coach this season after Rick Pitino left for the Boston Celtics, reached the Final Four when Kentucky overcame a 17-point second-half deficit Sunday to beat Duke 86-84.

It's the third straight year Kentucky (33-4) has made the Final Four. Seven Wildcats were members of the team that lost to Arizona in the final last year. Five were on the 1996 championship team.

Despite following in Pitino's footsteps, Smith said he didn't feel pressure to reach the Final Four. If anything, he said, the pressure was off because he was a new coach.

"The expectations of fans and people, I think, around the country were, 'They've got a good team, but there's no Rick Pitino there to lead them,'" said Smith, who took Tulsa (1994-95) and Georgia (1996-97) to the NCAA tournament.

Smith has sought advice from Pitino.

found dead in Arkansas home

EDFIELD, Ark. — Five people, including two young children, were found dead in a mobile home. The bodies were found Wednesday night after authorities went to the home at the request of relatives who had filed missing persons complaints. The victims were identified as Misty Irwin, 20; her cousin Shelly Sorg, 24; and her children Taylor, 3, and Shawn, 5; and Samantha Rhodes, 12. Samantha was a friend of the family who was helping with the two small children, authorities said. There were no arrests. "I haven't met them, I've just seen them going in and out. It's a complete shock," said a neighbor, Mary Featherston. "This is a quiet neighborhood. Kids ride their bicycles up and down the street," she said. The community is in the central part of the state, about 20 miles south of Little Rock.

Unauthorized Florida doctor fired

NEW YORK — A man posing as a licensed doctor worked more than three years in emergency rooms and performed dozens of complicated procedures, including opening up a chest and massaging a heart, authorities said. Timothy C. McNamee, 34, graduated from medical school and completed a residency at Brooklyn Hospital but never passed the U.S. Medical License examination, state Attorney General Dennis Vacco said Wednesday. Lacking a license, McNamee used an altered version of his wife's legitimate medical registration certificate, authorities said. McNamee, who surrendered Wednesday, could face four years in prison if convicted of unauthorized practice of a profession. "McNamee blatantly masqueraded as a doctor and performed complicated and intrusive medical procedures on his unwitting patients," Vacco said. McNamee worked weekends as a staff physician at Brooklyn Hospital Center and its Caledonia campus, commuting from Stuart, Fla. Brooklyn Hospital officials said they had no record of any complaints against McNamee and no indication of any foul-ups in treatment. McNamee was fired March 18.

25 girls die in school house fire

MOBASA, Kenya — Fire swept through a school dormitory near the Indian Ocean port of Mombasa early Thursday, killing 25 schoolgirls and injuring 29 others trapped by locked doors. The girls died of burns or were crushed when the wooden roof collapsed. The dormitory doors always were locked from the inside at night to protect the girls from intruders, school matron Margaret Mwaka told The Nation newspaper. "I was woken up by screams from the students, who shouted that there was a fire," said Mwaka, who led some girls to safety through a back door. At dawn, rescuers scooped the charred bones of the 15- and 16-year-olds into body bags. Weeping parents gathered outside the dormitory, a skeleton of blackened bricks. An investigation was under way to determine the cause of the fire at the Bombolulu Secondary School near Mazaras, about 10 miles northwest of Mombasa. An electrical fault was suspected.

Show may set a historical peace

JERUSALEM — Peace between Israel and the Palestinians may be foundering, but in a make-believe corner of television-land, relations are blossoming. A joint Israeli-Palestinian production of Sesame Street goes on the air April 1, complete with fuzzy new Palestinian and Israeli Muppets created specially for the show. The show's creators hope the exploits of Dafu, a purple Israeli Muppet, and Haneen, an orange Palestinian one, will help teach mutual respect and understanding by exposing Israeli and Palestinian children to each other's culture and languages and breaking down stereotypes. The show, which includes American programming dubbed into Hebrew and Arabic, will air on Israel Educational Television. The Palestinian segments will also air separately on Palestinian television.

Scripture of the Day

"Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

— Isaiah 41:10

Gary Hironaka likes this scripture because "as long as we have Heavenly Father on our side, we have nothing to fear." Hironaka, 18, is a freshman from Kailua, Hawaii, majoring in sports medicine.

"I'm very close to Rick, and we've talked about just how to maintain your sense of focus," Smith said.

"We need to be hitting on all cylinders in order to compete with what I consider a very outstanding and very deep Stanford team," he said.

Stanford (30-4) erased a 6-point deficit in the final minute to beat Rhode Island 79-77 as Arthur Lee scored 13 of his 26 points in the final 2:04. The victory sent Stanford to its first Final Four since 1942.

Cardinal coach Mike Montgomery said other college coaches have given him advice this week on coping with distractions.

"They just mentioned that it's almost as if you don't have time to prepare your team like you normally do and that you have to be selfish; you have to say 'no,'" Montgomery said.

Though North Carolina coach Bill Guthridge experienced the Final Four as an assistant to longtime coach Dean Smith, entering the event as a head coach has opened his eyes.

"Everybody's coming out of the woodwork wanting tickets and needing this and needing that. It happens so fast; it's not anything that you can plan in advance for," Guthridge said.

North Carolina, propelled by All-American Antawn Jamison and guard Shammond Williams, beat Connecticut 75-64 to win the East Regional and reach the Final Four for the 14th time. It's the second consecutive Final Four appearance for North Carolina and the team's third trip in four years.

Guthridge said he doubts nervousness will be a factor come game time Saturday.

Mary Savage, a therapist from Arkansas State University, said children in the adjacent elementary school expressed their fears by drawing pictures.

A lot drew themselves "like they were the ones and their teachers were the ones that got killed," she said.

Cory Hallett, 9, held his mother's hand Wednesday as she talked with reporters. The third-grader said he overheard the boys say they were "going to kill people."

"He was afraid to go to sleep," said his mother, Holly.

"He felt guilty 'cause he was able to go to sleep," she said.

Friday was already scheduled off, so children won't get back to academics until Monday. But Superintendent Grover Cooper said counseling sessions will continue as long as necessary.

Brooks stayed close to his mother, but he expressed hope that things would return to normal soon.

"I'm a little bit nervous about going back to school," Brooks said. "But I know the teachers protected us well — and I'm sure they'll do it again."

Billings temple under way

BETTE JEFFRESS

Daily Universe Staff Writer

Each of Jesus Christ of saints recently announced breaking services for the temple Saturday. The temple will begin at 3 p.m. at the temple and presiding will be Elder Hugh W. Pinnock of the First Quorum of the Seventy and president of the America Central Area of the LDS Church, according to a news release from the LDS Church.

The groundbreaking is a historic occasion for a sacred edifice. David Hein, regional spokesman for the LDS Church, told the Daily Universe Press.

The temple, at 3100 Rim Road, will be approximately 150,000 square feet. Its single spire will be the center of the building and has a gold statue of the Christ on top.

The building will have Wyoming white dolomite and tan aggregate sandstone outside.

Construction will be complete in approximately two years.

This LDS temple will serve more than 66,000 members of the LDS Church, who live in Montana, northern Wyoming, North Dakota and western South Dakota, according to the news release.

LDS Church President Gordon B. Hinckley announced plans to build the Billings Temple in 1996, but concerns of Billings residents about the temple's locations and design delayed construction.

"Opposition was caused by people who did not understand or know enough about the church," said Don LeFevre, spokesman for the LDS Church. "But ultimately we (worked) with them and once they (understood) what the temple is all about, the opposition was gone."

Delays in starting construction were also caused by the approval of the local government and obtaining the appropriate building permits. The finalizing of architectural plans also took time to process.

Groundbreaking can only take place when everything is approved and finalized, LeFevre said.

The LDS Church has 51 temples in operation, and another 21 are in various stages of design and construction, according to the news release.

Dr. Jones' research interests include language testing, technology-assisted language learning, technology-assisted language research, and analysis of modern spoken German.

He fulfilled a mission to Germany and has served as bishop of the BYU 64th ward as well as in numerous other Church callings. He is married to Janet Taylor, also a BYU graduate, and they have five children and four grandchildren.

Premier's status remains undefined

Associated Press

— Acting Prime Minister Viktor Yeltsin chaired his session Thursday but the possible composition of a new government, according to news reports.

Boris Yeltsin, who was elected president on Monday after the resignation of the previous president, declined to say whether the acting premier would be appointed.

Yeltsin said he will be, maybe he won't be, he said after a one-on-one meeting with French and German leaders in Moscow.

Yeltsin was preparing his "conclusions" of government policy and said he would tell Yeltsin soon, the acting premier was quoted as saying in a news agency.

Yeltsin gave two weeks to nominate a new premier, and Russian officials said Yeltsin has the right to choose, though others may also be considered.

Yeltsin's leader brushed aside the possibility of a 35-year-old company executive with months experience in the government was too young for the job, he said.

"It bothers us," Yeltsin said. "The main thing is that the person has the knowledge and the skills a minister needs."

Yeltsin, busy Thursday at a summit with French President Jacques Chirac and German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, was not at the Cabinet meeting.

Thursday's Cabinet meeting, attended mostly by outgoing ministers who remain in their positions on a temporary basis, was devoted to routine matters such as customer rights and a report on the Health Ministry, according to the ITAR-Tass news agency.

Kiriyenko cut short any attempts to talk about the composition of a new Cabinet, according to Interfax.

Yeltsin said his new premier will pursue free-market reforms. Yet any of the Cabinet candidates who meets this criterion is likely to face a difficult fight for confirmation in the hostile Parliament, which is dominated by the Communists and their allies.

"If Mr. Yeltsin simply forms a new team to continue the old course, we will never support it," Communist leader Gennady Zyuganov said Wednesday.

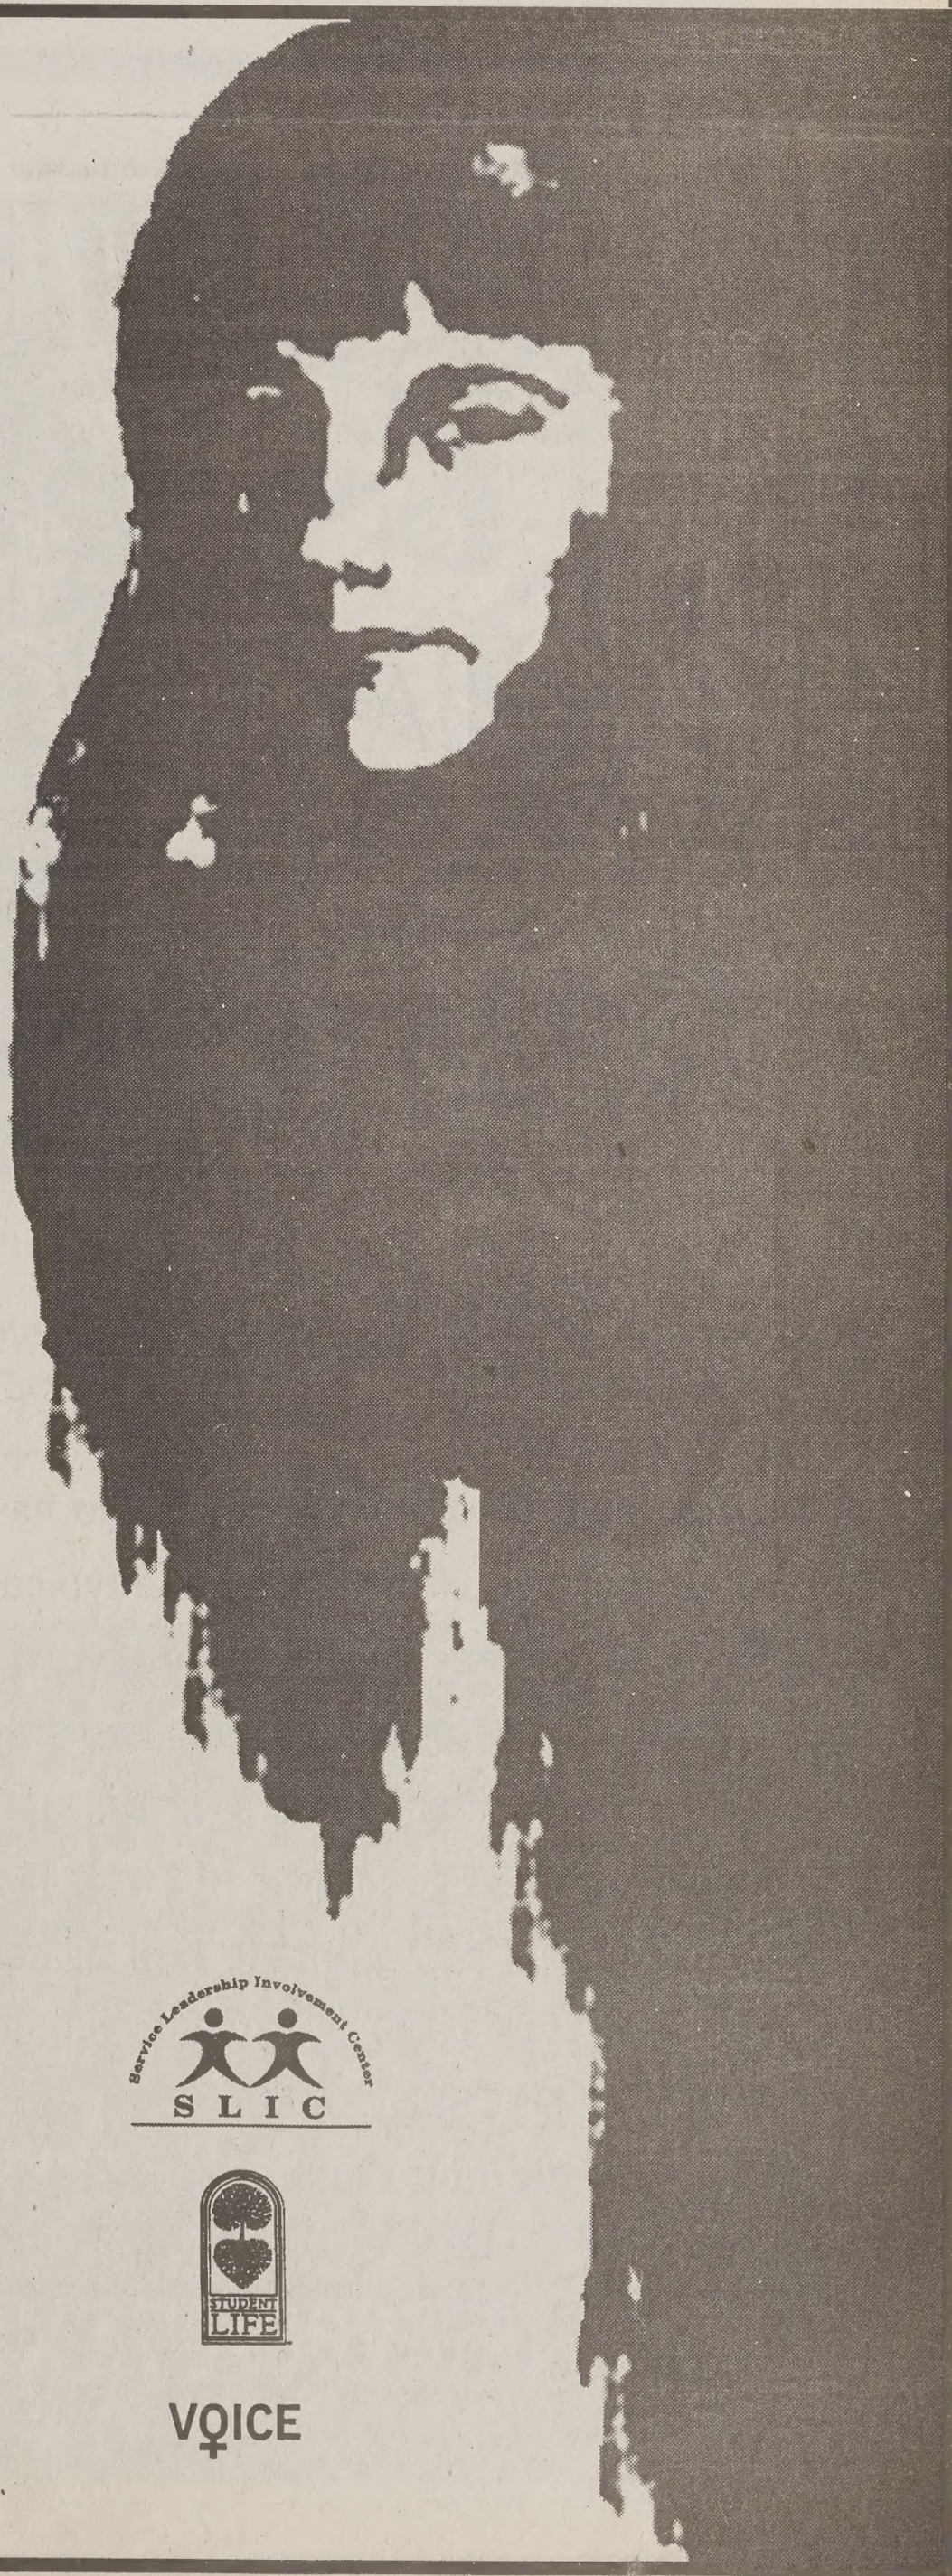

The Communists in Parliament may not want a showdown with Yeltsin. The constitution allows him to dissolve Parliament if it rejects his candidate three times.

CRIMINAL MISCHIEF

At 7:20 a.m., March 20, police received a report of animals found in men's restroom on the seventh floor of V-Hall of Deseret Towers. Responding officers found five chickens in a cardboard box, 50 goldfish in the sinks and a layer of straw about six to eight inches deep covering the bathroom floor. An investigation led to the identification of the truck that was used to transport the straw. Charges are pending against the owner of the truck and police are continuing an investigation to identify others involved with the incident.

Early Wednesday morning, an unknown subject shot the exterior windows of three dorm rooms with a paintball gun. One of the three windows was partially open and a paintball hit a computer inside the room. No damage was done and the incident is under investigation.

March 23, a vehicle was observed driving on the grass near Helaman Hall near Budge Hall at 2:40 a.m. The vehicle was stopped and the driver was issued a citation for criminal mischief.

DISORDERLY CONDUCT

An employee of the snack bar by the door track of the Smith Fieldhouse observed a male individual watching her for most of the day. When she asked him to leave he disappeared and she began to discuss the man with a fellow food service employee. The man then reappeared and warned her not to talk about him behind his back. A verbal confrontation ensued and continued when the man came back several times throughout the day. The man later threw the contents of an orange juice container on the employee and ran away.

TRESPASSING

At 12:30 a.m. Sunday morning, police received a call concerning a male suspect hiding in one of the rooms of women's dorm S-Hall of Deseret Towers. Along with the head resident, officers found the suspect

In a Thursday presentation titled "Growing up with Words," English professor Leslie G. Norris explored the wonder of words and the importance of children sensing this wonder.

"When you're growing up with words, it's essential that all kinds of words are offered to us all," Norris said. "Children are great copiers. The language they grow up with is not their own." As a result, Norris said, the way children use the language is sometimes amusing and unconventional.

He also said of children's use of words that "making and speaking and writing is all one if the freshness and clarity of observation is maintained."

Grant M. Boswell, associate professor of English, said children learn an average of 13 words per day, making the average 17-year-old's vocabulary 80,000 words.

Boswell said that after 17 the increase of vocabulary "slows at different degrees, depending on ... your circumstances."

"As we grow older," Norris said, "we miss something of the freshness of our language."

However, Norris has never lost his excitement over the freshness of the language.

In his poems, especially those that he has written for children, Norris uses words in unusual ways adults rarely consider because of their familiarity with the language.

"There must be something that makes our words three-dimensional," and this quality makes such things as plays on words and poetry possible, Norris said.

And this quality makes poetry "words playing with words, words hiding behind other words — behind themselves, really," Norris said.

Norris said that words are "the one thing that is ageless. The words we grow up with ... are what make us human." Words aren't just symbols, Norris said. "They are what they say. They make those things."

Miss Navajo Nation Radmilla Cody stressed the importance of Native Americans being proud of who they are and never denying their heritage at a symposium Thursday sponsored by the Tribe of Many Feathers organization.

Cody said she believes being proud of their heritage will help the abuse and alcoholism problems in the Navajo Nation.

She encouraged the Navajo students in attendance to earn their education, then take that knowledge back to their reservations to educate and uplift their people.

"Spend time with your grandparents. They know everything about our heritage. They are the most important resource we have as Navajo people," she said.

Cody, 23, was raised with Navajo traditions taught by her grandmother and also speaks the native language, but she is not of pure Navajo descent.

"A lot of people thought I shouldn't be crowned Miss Navajo because I am half African-American, but I tell them, 'I don't have time for that, I have bigger and more important things to worry about,'" Cody said.

Native Americans commonly face many challenges because of their lack of cultural identity and pride, according to a Multicultural Student

"We need to help them realize they are of self-worth. One reason there is a high suicide rate among some tribes is because they have no sense of identity," Lavay Talk said.

Older generations of Native Americans do not suffer from confu-

Traditional dances are rooted in ancient healing rituals and worship methods, examples of which will be presented at the Heritage Week powwow today and Saturday in the Wilkinson Center ballroom.

"The goal of the science fair is to encourage kids to learn by inquiry, to be curious about things in the environment around them, and then to take steps to solve these puzzles through the scientific process," Tollestrup said.

The newest program affiliated with the partnership is the cohort program, run by the department of Teacher Education. It is designed to place education majors in elementary school classrooms, providing a practical training ground to prepare prospective teachers.

On Monday, CITES will sponsor a conference where 200 teachers and administrators from BYU and its affiliated school districts will meet to learn about the "Moral Dimensions of Teaching," Hughes said.

The Partnership Program has existed for 13 years. Its roots can be traced to a national program aimed at helping teachers improve by allowing them to continue their education throughout their teaching career.

BYU association helps spouses cross cultures

Editor's note: This is the first of a two-part series.

International spouses of BYU students and faculty have a way to bridge the cultural gap and eliminate the isolation they may feel with a support group sponsored by International Services.

The International Women's Association was organized about eight years ago to offer friendship opportunities to these spouses, said Brenda Wadley, supervisor in the International Office.

"Often these women are trapped in their homes all day while their husbands are on campus," Wadley said.

The association provides a way for the women, who are often not fluent in English, to get involved and meet people.

"The group values individual differences and hopes to foster a warm and friendly atmosphere where there are no more strangers and foreigners, but all are friends together," according to the official values mission of the association.

Members of the groups include natives of Japan, France, Germany and England.

"One of the women only speaks French, but she enjoys the activities and everyone's company," said Tokie Tagai of Provo, a regular participant of IWA who emigrated from Japan 10 years ago.

Tagai said she loves attending the meetings and activities because those involved are good people and she has met many friends there.

Her husband said he believes IWA is a beneficial program. He is appreciative of the comfort and friendships his wife has found in Provo through the services of this group.

The group meets once each month for an opportunity to share ideas and skills. These large group meetings focus on international cooking and cultures, Wadley said.

Smaller weekly groups also meet for English classes, bus tours, local cultural events and other social activities.

On Thursday, March 12, Tagai invited the women to her home to celebrate the traditional Japanese Girls' Day holiday.

For this celebration, it is customary to display a Japanese doll collection and eat ethnic party foods.

The women learn about various cultures as different group members share customs and values that are important to them.

The association has also made a commitment to BYU and standards of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints part of their mission.

Since many international spouses are not LDS, the group feels it is important they show by example the joy that comes from righteously living the gospel of Jesus Christ.

They vow to uphold the Honor Code and the standards of the church, to better represent BYU and to model the behavior expected of the BYU community.

Chump's CD has reviewer torn

By MEGAN ELISON
megan@du2.byu.edu
Universe Staff Writer

Local punk/rap band Chump's new CD "Sucka" really has me torn. I can't honestly decide if I like it or not, but I think maybe that's exactly what the band's intent is with the disc.

The disc fast becomes a list of pros and cons.

Let's start with the good news.

Chump is a parody and always has been a parody. The CD cover is an excellent style for the band. Band members are placed in a mock Iwo Jima set-up, holding a giant sucker on a pile of industrial waste. It comes across very effectively, and is completed by inside photos of band members holding suckers of their own heads.

The disc also has some musical high points.

The band is introduced name by name in "We're Not a Ska Band," giving listeners an idea of just what Chump isn't. This is a commentary on the profusion of ska bands in this area — a much-needed differing opinion. It gives amusing definitions, encoded in Chump slang, of what band members are like and succeeds in presenting the band to listeners.

Probably the best song on the disc is the opener "The Floor is Caving In," which describes the feel of a typical Chump show. With heavy emphasis on rhythm and rhyme and a very cool bridge in the middle, the song perfectly describes the gig and makes you want to be there. Beginning with a recorded Mr. T track, song lyrics are fun and fast-paced, giving a successful in-your-face attitude.

Another excellent track is "Old School," because it reminisces elementary school days in a way that is easy and fun to identify with. Hearing someone talk up the virtues of velcro, Mr. T, Arnold and Willis and Snoopy Sno Cones is very nostalgic. Although the song could have done with a shorter ending, it is very effective at showing listeners a good time.

The best parody on the disc is "Baddest Brutha," which is rife with dark humor about a gangsta-type who kills people right and left just for looking at him wrong. The song makes you think (probably more than the band intended it to) and shows Chump's ability to give life a new perspective.

One other cool part of disc is Chump's version of the '80s hit "Electric Avenue." Although the original version is better, Chump's chorus has a great backing vocal track and some excellent drum solo bits that give it personality.

Chump members have formed a new band dedicated to only '80s covers called Clubber Lang and the Heavyweights. This band will open for Chump Friday at a CD release party at Wrapsody, playing everything from Cyndi Lauper to Howard Jones in punk/rap style.

And now that the sugar is out, it's time for the bad news.

The disc is incredibly long. With 16 labeled songs and an extra track thrown on the end just because, it could have been cut by four or five tracks and still been effective. It probably would have been better.

After song 10 or 11, the tracks start to sound the same. The extra song sounds like a duplicate of "Go Ask Your Mom," and "Rhythm in the Boom" is hard to distinguish from the rest of the disc.

Now, to explain some more about how I see Chump: Chump is the kind of band that likes to know that people are shaken up by their music. They seem to revel in hearing that people dislike them.

This gutsy attitude is what gives Chump its appeal. I honestly think if people liked Chump more and accepted their songs without question, it would be curtains for the band.

"Sucka" will be on sale today at the band's CD release party at Wrapsody Live, 117 N. University Avenue. The Chump performance starts at 8 p.m. with openers Clubber Lang and Phly McKay. Entrance to the show is $4 or free with CD purchase; CDs are $10.

Provo band Chump shows off its punk/rap roots. Chump members are, from left, bass player Jim Gamett, drummer Dan Benedict, vocalist Jason Hall and guitarist Mike Farr. Chump performs at their CD release party today at Wrapsody Live, 117 N. University Ave., starting at 8 p.m. Cost is $4 or free with purchase of their $10 CD. Club Lang and Phly McKay are opening.

Williams celebrates his first 'golden dude'

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — When Robin Williams bounded backstage at this year's Oscar ceremony, it was clear that even Hollywood's greatest honor wasn't enough to make him get all serious on us.

Confronted by a roomful of reporters holding up numbered signs for a chance to ask Williams about his best supporting actor award for "Good Will Hunting," he swiftly kicked into high comic gear.

"What am I bid?" he said, adopting the nasal tones of an auctioneer. Then: "We will pick 229, 229. ... Who won the Volvo? Number 1523, yes. We're having a good time here."

Williams had been nominated three times before, for "Dead Poets Society," "The Fisher King" and "Good Morning, Vietnam," without receiving an award. Actors with a comic background, as Williams observed, can find recognition from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences elusive.

Monday night, the statuette he dubbed the "golden dude" was his.

Williams' portrayal of Sean McGuire, a psychologist who connects with a brilliant but troubled youth played by Matt Damon, was good enough to drown out such competition as Anthony Hopkins and Burt Reynolds.

Williams' award is an impressive milestone for someone who first scored with the public as Mork from Ork, on "Happy Days," and on his own series "Mork and Mindy."

He went on to deliver affecting performances in films including "The World According to Garp."

As Williams reminded reporters, he is a real professional. He studied in New York at the Juilliard School when John Houseman headed the department. Call Williams wild and crazy, but call him a thespian too.

1. If you had to pick, is this the nomination you would have given yourself the Oscar for?

Williams: Oh, yes. Oh yes, this one, yes. The other ones were just foreplay. This is a wild night. It's insane. ... I feel proud of the boys (Affleck and Damon) out there, too.

2. What does the Oscar mean to you?

Williams: It's extraordinary. It's, like, it's the golden dude. I've been here three times before and lost. ... Basically, my odds before were the same as the Jamaican bobsled team winning. And tonight it was kind of interesting because I didn't think I had a chance. But when they said it, it was truly a shock, and it's a great honor. You don't know what it's like. I'm sailing. Much cheaper than Prozac.

3. Why did you thank your dad in your acceptance?

Williams: When I said I wanted to be an actor he said, 'Have a back-up profession like welding.' And I went to my first welding class and the teacher had one eye and I said, 'I have to go.' But he (Dad) was very supportive and I understood. He had a dream, I don't know what it was, that he had to give up and work like crazy to support his family. So when he saw that I had found something I loved, he really helped me and stood by it and it was really wonderful.

4. With your background as a comedian, does the Oscar validate you as an actor?

Williams: Right. One of the people I admire most is Peter Sellers. He never got one. ... He did the most extraordinary comic thing in 'Dr. Strangelove.' ... While you're a comic, sometimes you feel like this slightly damaged person: 'Oh, you're a comedian. Park over here.'

Joan Cusack is out there, she's extraordinary, one of the funniest people on the planet. But comedy in the academy; I don't know what it is sometimes. Maybe because we're unusual people, we scare you.

There are two programs of several films each, both showing at 7:30 p.m. Program A is in W-111 Ezra Taft Benson Building; Program B is in W-112. Program A will also be shown at noon Saturday in the Joseph Smith Building Auditorium, with Program B immediately following it at 2 p.m., so you can see both programs — a total of 32 films — if you desire. Tickets for all of the aforementioned showings are $1. Saturday at 7:30 p.m., there will be a "Best of Final Cut" show, presenting the absolute cream of the crop, in the Joseph Smith Building Auditorium. Tickets for that are $4.

MOVIES — INTERNATIONAL CINEMA: Here are the movies at International Cinema, 250 SWKT, this weekend. Information is provided by IC. "Farewell" (1983, 2 hrs. 8 min.) is about the last days of a condemned island village. The inhabitants prepare elaborate farewells before the island's destruction. It's in Russian with English subtitles and shows at 3:15 p.m. today; 4:20 p.m. Saturday. "Garden of Delights" (1970, 1 hr. 39 min.) is a satirical, farcical film about the Spanish regime, the Swiss, and a millionaire's family. It's in Spanish with English subtitles and shows at 6:15 and 10:20 p.m. today; 2:20 p.m. Saturday. "Larisa" (1980, 25 min.), a short film, is a tribute to filmmaker Larisa Shepitko, made shortly after her death by her husband Elem Klimov (who also directed "Farewell"). It's in Russian with English subtitles and shows at 5:35 p.m. today; 6:40 p.m. Saturday. "A Handful of Dust" (1988, 1 hr. 57 min.) is a satire about an aristocratic English couple whose life is shattered when a friend comes to stay with them. It's in English and shows at 8:10 p.m. today; 12:10, 7:20 and 9:35 p.m. Saturday. All shows are free with International Cinema card and $1 without.

Reid shines as Phoenix Suns' assistant

By ADAM WHITTEN

adam@du2.bnu.edu

Universe Sports Writer

Even though hip replacement surgery has forced former BYU head basketball coach Roger Reid to use a cane at times, Reid has landed on his feet in the NBA.

Reid's story has been well documented. After compiling a 152-77 record during his tenure at BYU, which spanned from 1989-1996, Reid was fired in December of 1996. Tony Manning served as interim coach the remainder of the season until Steve Cleveland was hired.

Reid spent last season hovering on the outskirts of the game. He tendered several offers to return to coaching. For example, Reid was South Alabama's choice to replace Bill Russellman following his departure after the 1996-97 season. Reid said he never felt comfortable with the situation, so he turned it down.

Reid was still on the outside looking in until one of his former players called him and offered him a job. Danny Ainge, a star at BYU from 1978-81 and current coach of the Phoenix Suns, offered Reid a job as one of his assistants. Reid accepted the job on Jan. 8.

Reid said the pro game is different mainly because the players are so much better, but he also noted there is a lot as much preparation and practice time in the NBA because teams play many games. He also said a loss in the NBA is not as devastating as a loss in college.

"In college, it's like every game is the World Series," Reid said. "You don't play that many games, so a loss can mean a lot. Here a loss isn't devastating."

On the Suns' staff, the coaches are not assigned certain positions to coach or delegated to offensive or defensive strategy, Reid said. Instead, coaches have input on all aspects of the game.

Ainge said Reid's transition to the pro game has gone smoothly. He said Reid is learning to adjust to the differences that are found at the NBA level of basketball, but said he thinks Reid is enjoying himself.

"I think his experience has helped him the most," Ainge said. "He's been coaching and been in basketball. He's got a great understanding of the game and his knowledge he shares with me is (the reason) why I got him."

Phoenix guard Kevin Johnson said a lifetime college coach can add things to an NBA team that often is overlooked by NBA veterans.

"Sometimes when you get to the NBA, you get a little relaxed," Johnson said. "You get used to doing things on a different level. (Reid) brings that college mentality of the fundamentals are still important."

Suns forward Danny Manning said Reid's experience has helped the team. He said Reid is in the ideal position to learn because he is not the head coach. As a result, Reid can learn how to deal with the NBA player.

"In the NBA, the players are different," Manning said. "(The players) are motivated by different things as opposed to being in college. The longer he's around, the better he'll become."

Manning said Reid has done well because he is not afraid to speak up when he feels he can help the team.

Reid said he is not sure whether he will remain in the NBA or return to college one day. Instead, he is savoring his opportunity with the Suns and trying to be successful.

Reid said he did not follow BYU basketball this season. He said the only reason he did not was due to the demanding schedule presented by his new position. He said he and Cleveland are good friends and has confidence that Cleveland will do well at BYU.

Reid did point out his 10-8 record in head-to-head meetings with University of Utah head coach Rick Majerus. He said he is still proud of all that he accomplished in the 20 years he spent at BYU as both an assistant and head coach.

BYU swimming and diving team sends five members to NCAAs

By COREY DAVIS

corey@du2.bnu.edu

Universe Sports Writer

Three swimmers and two divers from BYU are competing in the NCAA swimming and diving championships in Auburn, Ala.

BYU qualified to compete in thirteen events.

"We're going to take a run at the top 20. With 13 events, we think we've got a shot at that," said BYU swimming coach Tim Powers.

This is the first season BYU has qualified to compete in 13 events at the NCAA championships.

Freshman Arunas Savickas and senior Byron Shefchik both qualified to swim in three events. Savickas will swim in the 200- and 500-yard freestyle and the 200-yard backstroke.

Savickas is a seasoned swimmer. He's been to the Olympic games and competed there. He's competed in the world championships. Most of all, he's excited to score points for BYU," Powers said.

Shefchik hopes to gain a title in the 100- and 200-yard breaststroke. He will also swim in the 200-yard individual medley. Shefchik goes into the championships being ranked second in the breaststroke. He, along with the other BYU swimmers, will be swimming against the fastest swimmers in the nation, according to Powers.

"The competition is going to be the best in the world. The NCAA championships is the fastest meet in the world," Powers said. "There's not a faster short course meet anywhere."

Junior Dmitri Malinowski has qualified to compete in the 100 and 200-yard breaststroke.

The BYU swimmers will not be alone at the championships. Freshman Justin Wilcock has qualified to dive in the one- and three-meter spring board events. He will also be diving from the 10-meter platform. "Diving from the platform is exhilarating and fun to do," said Wilcock.

Junior Matthew Dahl has qualified to compete in the one- and three-meter springboard. Dahl had to out-dive his teammates to make it to the NCAA championships.

Qualifying to go to the NCAA championships came sooner for Dahl than he thought.

"I didn't expect it exactly. I just got back off my mission and this year I thought I was going to rebuild and I was hoping to go next year," said Dahl. "It's just an added bonus to go this year."

The divers are led by coach Keith Russell.

"I support (the divers) and give them the confidence to go ahead and do what they know how to do already," said Russell.

Men's tennis team splits two on last leg of road trip

By STEVE SHAW
shaw@du2.byu.edu
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU men's tennis team wrapped up its four-match road trip in California by splitting its last two matches against the University of Pacific and Stanford University.

In a shortened match, due to weather and scheduling matters, BYU defeated Pacific 4-0. The Cougars then faced No. 1 Stanford, but didn't fare as well as the Cougars lost all of the singles and doubles matches on their way to a 7-0 defeat.

Against Pacific, BYU hoped to play only singles matches to determine a winner, and play doubles only if the match was tied 3-3. BYU was scheduled to play a match with Cal-Berkely, which was previously postponed due to rain.

BYU took the first four singles matches to win the match, and since the weather was threatening, both coaches agreed to call the match and gave the win to the Cougars. The match with Cal-Berkely was again canceled because of the weather.

BYU head coach Jim Osborne was pleased with the way his team played against Pacific.

"Everybody was playing well. Pacific had beaten Utah, who we lost to earlier this year, so we were worried, but everybody was relaxed and played their game," Osborne said.

Manuel Calvo, Brad McIntosh, Jason Hardin and Jeff Harbach were the four winners for the Cougars, and Damien Ward was serving to win when the match was called.

BYU hoped to take that momentum into its match against a tough Stanford team, but the Cardinal was just too much for the Cougars.

In probably the shortest dual match coach Osborne has been in, about an hour and a half, the Cougars lost all of the singles matches in straight sets, and won only two games in each of the doubles matches. Three of Stanford's players are ranked in Top 25 in the ITA/Rolux Ranking and Osborne was quick to show respect for Stanford.

"They are very strong. In every match we had service breaks, but I couldn't hold our own serve," Osborne said. "It was a combination of not serving well, and their ability to return serves well. They deserve their ranking."

Osborne feels this road trip was confidence booster for his team.

"They are starting to believe they can win," Osborne said.

Osborne said he felt the trip was important for his team chemistry.

"This road trip helped us. We are a better team than what it shows in the rankings," Osborne said. "It's time for us to step up and get a good seed in the WAC tournament."

Men's gymnastics faces big test at Stanford

By KAREN DUFFIN
karen@du2.byu.edu
Universe Sports Writer

The men's gymnastics team will face its biggest challenge yet as it heads to the Mountain Pacific Sports Federation championship at Stanford this weekend. This meet will be the team's final preparation before the all-important NCAA West Regional Championship April 4.

The MPSF team championship will be decided today, with the individual titles up for grabs Saturday.

BYU will have two competitors in the race for the all-around title, Fabricio Olsson and Guard Young.

Young and Olsson have proven tough to beat, and they have been BYU's dominant competitors this season.

However, they will face strong competition against two top-six all-arounders from California and Nebraska.

This meet will feature all eight teams in the West Region, with six of the eight teams going to the NCAA West Regional Championships next week in Norman, Okla.

Qualification and seeding at Regionals are based on the average of the top two away scores and the top home score of each team. Scores from regionals will determine national qualifiers.

The University of California is favored to win both the MPSF and Regional titles. It is the top-ranked team in the nation, with an average NCAA qualifying score of 231.208. Nebraska is ranked second with a 230.408 average.

As a team, BYU is ranked ninth in the nation and third in the region with an average score of 227.25.

This has been a top year for the gymnastics team, with the Cougars reaching 228 for the first time, setting a new school record against Michigan State.

Head coach Mako Sakamoto is hopeful for this weekend's meet, but said the real competition will come next week.

"This is the last dash before regionals," Sakamoto said. "We're going to work through this one and just keep plugging away because the important one is Regionals."

indicts former Northwestern athletes

Associated Press

— On the eve of college basketball's showcase event, the sport's biggest point-shaving scandal, this time at a school known for its betting lines.

Indictments charged former players Kenneth Dion Lee, Williams and two others with the outcome of three basketball games during the 1994-95 season. The Wildcat football player was in a separate indictment in a bookmaking operation on the western campus.

Indictments in a string of games involving college basketball since the point-shaving scandal in 1951, which involved Kentucky, CCNY and became when the spotlight on basketball was brightest — before the Final Four in San ready to explode. It can't be anybody," Duke coach Mike Krzyzewski said. "You wouldn't know it until it happened." The point-shaving scandals at State and Tulane. Two Boston College football players were suspended for betting on football and major basketball games.

It is not surprising this is the third time Cedric Dempsey, a former director of the NCAA, was big an addiction on basketball as alcohol, and it is not surprising this is the third time.

Western is known more for its success than sports. The Wildcats made the Rose Bowl game football champions last year. They rarely have won any of the basketball teams. The club that went to the school's last basketball winning record, 15-14.

Indictments announced at the time, Lee and Williams were charged with conspiring with point-shaving. Pendergast and Brian were charged with conspiring with some of the three games against Wisconsin and on the road against Michigan.

Pendergast and Irving, who both now live in California, were accused of betting on Northwestern's opponents and persuading others to follow suit at casinos in Reno, Nev., Las Vegas and elsewhere, according to the U.S. attorney.

The Wildcats lost each game by at least 14 points and failed to cover the point spread against the Badgers and Nittany Lions. Northwestern finished the season 5-22 under coach Ricky Byrdsong, who did not return a message left at his office Thursday.

The government said Pendergast paid Lee $4,000 to fix the Penn State game. Prosecutors would not disclose how much more was involved in the alleged payoffs, other than to say the players got nothing for the Michigan game because they failed to beat the point spread.

The government said $20,000 was wagered on that game by the two accused gamblers, but would not say how much more money was involved.

The U.S. attorney's office discovered the alleged point-shaving during an ongoing investigation that was prompted by Northwestern's own internal investigation in 1994, said Randy Samborn, a spokesman for the U.S. attorney.

U.N. inspects Iraqi palace

Associated Press

BAHDAH, Iraq — U.N. weapons inspectors conducted their first-ever search of one of Saddam Hussein's palace compounds Thursday, accompanied by senior diplomats whose presence cleared their way into the previously off-limits sites. One diplomat, Horst Holthoff of Germany, described Iraqi cooperation as "fantastic, absolutely positive." The arms experts saw "everything they wanted to," Holthoff said, without elaborating. The American-led team left U.N. headquarters Thursday morning in a convoy of more than 20 vans and buses, following through a Feb. 23 accord brokered by U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan to open eight presidential compounds to inspections. "So far, the agreement is holding. That's all I ever wanted," President Clinton, who had threatened military strikes to force access, said Thursday from South Africa, the latest stop on his African tour. A U.N. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the inspectors went to Saddam's Radwaniyah palace outside Baghdad, believed to be one of the largest of the presidential compounds. The inspectors examined two of the palace's three parts Thursday, spokesman Ewen Buchanan in New York said. They broke into several teams inside the compound, Holthoff said. "I am personally really impressed by the spirit of the cooperation," the diplomat said of the Iraqis. The inspectors must certify that Iraq is rid of all its long-range missiles and chemical, biological and nuclear weapons before the U.N. Security Council will lift economic sanctions imposed after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in 1990. Although Iraq has had weeks to prepare the eight sites as it wished, and the timing of Thursday's inspection was announced in advance, the U.N. arms experts tried to keep secret which site would be first. "We don't know yet where we are going. We will be told by our chief inspector," one French inspector told reporters just before the convoy set out. He did not give his name. U.N. officials have said their main interest is not the palaces but the many buildings that share the same grounds. U.N. teams are not expecting to find actual weapons. Instead, they will be hunting for documents and other evidence that weapons were stored or made at these sites. Iraq had cited national sovereignty in keeping the palaces off-limits, and the presence of the 20 diplomats was meant to soothe any affront to Iraqi dignity. "Our mission is very important. I wish that we will succeed in it fully for the benefit of everybody," said Pietro Cordone, an Italian diplomat, told reporters beforehand. The 58 weapons inspectors are led by American Charles Duelfer, who is the chief assistant to Richard Butler, head of the U.N. Special Commission responsible for the searches for Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. Iraq has long insisted that it has destroyed all the banned weapons; Butler challenges the assertion. Butler said Tuesday that the inspections will last about two weeks. He did not rule out future visits. The stage for Thursday's search was set the night before when the leader of the diplomats, Jayantha Dhanapala from Sri Lanka, sent a written notice to the Iraqi government. Asked if that didn't take away the element of surprise so important to weapons inspections, Dhanapala said: "No, because we do not know where we are going and which particular site is going to be visited." Iraq's agreement with Annan deals with eight presidential sites spread across the country. The sites occupy an area of 12.5 square miles and 1,058 buildings.

Governor explains monument vetoes

Although Gov. Michael Leavitt says no one abhors the way President Clinton established the Grand Staircase-Escalante National Monument more than himself, he chose to veto two legislative bills that would use the state's resources to help battle the takeover. The governor addressed the media Thursday in the monthly press conference hosted by the University of Utah. In addition to explaining his vetoes of the legislative bills, he also addressed issues ranging from the recent tragedy in Arkansas to the University of Utah's basketball team's chances in the Final Four. Speaking on the national monument, Leavitt is convinced the state does not have a strong enough legal stance to win an argument in court. "We have examined closely the legal authority which he used to do that. And regrettably, it is a law that just flat needs to be fixed. But it needs to be fixed by Congress. It has been challenged over and over again in the courts by many other states other than us, and I concluded that it was not a productive strategy at this point, to begin working with a legal strategy," Leavitt said. Leavitt added that he was not giving up on the issue, but that the state should use other avenues to deal with the problem. He said Tuesday's tragedy in Arkansas seems to be the product of a culture where violence is glorified and is too frequently portrayed in the media. Incidents like this show a need for regulating weapons in certain public areas, he said. "I have supported and will continue to support legislation that will allow us to have our schools as gun-free zones. That would include, in my mind, those who would have even a permit to carry a weapon on a concealed basis. I think our schools, I think people in private homes, I think our churches should have the ability to say we don't want guns here," he said. The governor was pleased with the attention the state is receiving because of its athletic reputation. With people looking to Utah for the 2002 Olympics, and the possibility of having the University of Utah basketball team win the NCAA championship during the same year the Jazz could win the NBA title, the people of Utah benefit from a tremendous spirit of unity.

Seniors look to lead Cougars to next level

By KIMBER KAY
Special Sections Editor

Will BYU have a winning team this year? Looking at the lineup of returning seniors, that just might be a possibility.

What difference do seniors make? Duane Busby, executive assistant to LaVell Edwards, said seniors are more inclined to pull off a win in a close game because they want to end their collegiate career on a high note. There were 26 seniors on the 1996 team that went all the way to the Cotton Bowl.

Most people assume that leading the team is the job of the quarterback. While this is true for the offensive, the defense has a reputation of being aggressive and pumping up the team.

Shay Muirbrook was a great example of a good leader. Tom Ramage, special teams coordinator and defensive line coach, credits Muirbrook's example for helping the team pull off a 14-1 season.

"Shay was a great football player,

Looking to improve on last year's dismal 6-5 record, the BYU football team is primed and ready for this year as spring practice concludes.

LaVell Edwards is entering his 27th year as head coach of the Cougars, but doesn't look upon last season as one of the highlights.

"It was the way the season ended. If we had lost our first four and then won eight or nine straight, it would've been a different feeling," Edwards said. "It's different when you lose 5 of your last 4 games."

Edwards said last year was probably the first time in his career at BYU he had lost more than one game in the month of November.

Some of the players from last year's team echo Edward's sentiments.

"It was a completely embarrassing season," said senior linebacker Brad Martin. "It was frustrating for us as players, and for the fans also. I'm sure."

"It was disappointing," said junior offensive lineman John Tait. "We had the potential and the players, but we didn't get it done. It was a tough year."

Players and coaches agree last year's record is being used as a motivational factor for the team this year.

Edwards used the early finish to last season as an opportunity to have a successful recruiting effort. With the addition of All-American junior college transfers and some talented high school players, BYU was able to add athletes to key positions that lost players to graduation.

"We hope our recruits will come in and be ready to play. All four J.C. guys will be able to help," Edwards said.

"Last season should always be in the back of your mind. If you still need motivation, you shouldn't be playing," Martin said.

"When things start to lag in practice, or if the effort isn't there, people start

Incoming freshmen add depth

By DAVE HERSAM
hersam@du2.byu.edu
Universe Sports Writer

Anxious to bounce back from a disappointing season and lay a strong foundation for the football future, the Cougars will look for contributions from their incoming freshmen.

This year's class of 21 includes a pair of Gatorade State Players-of-the-Year, the son of an NFL coach, the son of a former Cougar and brothers of current and former Cougars.

Head coach LaVell Edwards said he feels very good about the new players. "This is one of our better classes," Edwards said. "We filled our needs, improved our overall speed and did a nice job in-state."

BYU's recruiting needs included big shoes to fill in the offense, especially on the offensive line. The incoming freshmen should help fill those shoes, with a total of 16 recruits on offense, including six linemen and two tight ends.

Recruiting coordinator Chris Pella said freshmen never used to be expected to play.

But because of Title IX, teams have fewer scholarships and freshmen are pushed onto the field.

"Part of LaVell's philosophy is that everyone competes for spots in the fall," Pella said. "If a freshman is the better player, he'll get a chance. It has a lot to do with who we already have at a position, but with injuries and other problems, you just never know."

The Gatorade Players-of-the-Year coming to BYU are running back Junior Mahe of Utah and linebacker Moa Peaua of Nevada.

New linebacker Brady Poppinga's father Dennis was a BYU tight end, Isaac Herring will play on the offensive line where his brother Eli also played and running back T.J. Sitake could share time in the backfield with his brother Kalani.

NFL fans might recognize the name

Kevin Gilbride as the coach of the San Diego Chargers. While he will keep that job, his son of the same name is the Cougars only quarterback recruit.

Complete recruit information should be available at the team's renovated web site.

Mahe and Sitake, both Utah residents, were also recruited by big name football schools such as Washington, Texas A&M, UCLA, USC and Nebraska.

"My mom really wanted me to come here to stay close to the church," Mahe said. "I was actually set on going to 'the U' until my BYU recruiting trip."

Unlike signees with Cougar connections, Mahe was influenced by his older brother Stone, who had a good experience as a linebacker at the University of Utah.

Mahe attended Brighton High School in Salt Lake City and said he went to Utah's football camp every summer.

"I knew I wanted to stay close to home, and when I came to BYU on my recruiting trip it just felt right," Mahe said.

Sitake agreed that staying close to his family was a big factor in deciding to come to BYU.

"It was important to me to stay in the state, and I think I would have chosen BYU even if my brother weren't here," Sitake said. "Having him here is just an added bonus."

Both players have experience on offense and defense and said they're hoping to contribute to the team however they can.

"The U' actually wanted me more for defense," Mahe said. "I'd rather not use my redshirt year until after my mission, so I'm hoping to get in this year wherever the team needs me."

Sitake agrees he'd like to play in his first year if at all possible.

"I don't want to set my goals too low. The coaches told me to get in shape and be ready to play and I'd like to work my way into the starting lineup, but my main goal is to help the team however I can," Sitake said.

One freshman who contributed successfully his first year is 1997 WAC Freshman of the Year Jaron Dabney.

Pella said Dabney was able to do so much as a freshman because he did simple things such as kick returns and isolation running plays.

Now that Dabney has had a full year to learn the offense, the team has been using him more as a wide receiver in spring practice.

Dabney said freshmen not only have to learn the offense but also have to overcome their nerves.

"I was really nervous at first, and the best way to get over anxiety is to just get out on the field and do it," Dabney said.

"I would tell freshmen that to be successful their first year they need to work hard in practice, expect to contribute and prove themselves to the coaches," Dabney said.

Whether this year's freshmen get their numbers called this season or not, they will certainly be Cougars to look for in years to come.

this description.

Kevin Gilbride, a high school senior from Jacksonville, Fla., signed a letter of intent to play with BYU. Kevin's dad, Kevin Sr., coaches the NFL's San Diego Chargers.

Last year, the Cougars tried to bring up their running game to help their quarterbacks. After ending the season with the lowest offensive production in BYU history, it appears the attempt wasn't too successful.

There is no question that BYU's offensive coaching staff is stronger in learning the offense.

the 1997 Spring Game, and started at fullback in Fall 1997.

Sitake will be playing as a sophomore this fall. Because of the seriousness of his injury, last season will be his redshirt year, leaving him three more years of eligibility.

Sitake was recruited by Notre Dame, Iowa, UCLA and Stanford. He earned high honors while attending Kirkwood High in his home state of Mo. He received letters in football, basketball and track.

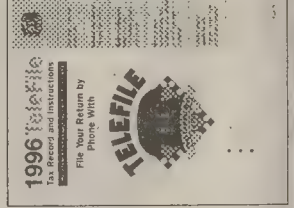

And don't get confused this fall if you see two BYU jerseys with Fifita-Sitake on the back. Sitake's brother, T.J., is a senior at Timpview High school in Provo, who plays fullback and tight end, and has signed with the Cougars for this fall.

Kalani Sitake, who measures 6-foot-1-inch, says his brother is even taller than he is at 6-4. "I don't think we'll compete with each other, but we will try to help each other get better," Kalani Sitake said.

Feterik poised to take charge

By SCOTT BELL
bell@du2.byu.edu
Associate Sports Editor

Kevin Feterik stood alone in the bowels of Cougar Stadium in the aftermath of BYU's season-ending loss to Utah. A fourth loss to the Utes in five years, a postseason with no bowl appearance for the second time in three years and a 6-5 finish all pressed freshly upon him.

Standing there, Feterik vowed not let it happen again. He said the team had been satisfied after the previous year's 14-1 finish and had let up. He said this offseason would be different.

Well, spring is back — the season of renewal and beginning. So how are Feterik and his mates doing on making good on their promise?

"We've had a great offseason," Feterik said. "We started in January and went all the way through spring practice. At 12 we would throw — all the receivers, quarterbacks, running backs and tight ends. At 2 we ran as a team, and at 3 we lifted as a team. It was the first time we've ever had mandatory lifting as a team. Everyone had to be there; they took roll and everything."

Feterik's season last year was the epitome of a roller coaster ride. He lost a battle in summer practice with Paul Shoemaker for the starting job only to take over the controls just a half into the season. In BYU's next game, Feterik led the team to its most impressive win of the season, a 13-10 shocker over nationally-ranked Arizona State.

Just two games later, Feterik went down with an ankle injury against

Miller excited to compete for QB spot

By BRENDAN BURKE

The BYU starting quarterback position is still up for grabs according to BYU football coaches and players.

Junior Kevin Feterik and sophomore Drew Miller are the central players in this year's quarterback derby.

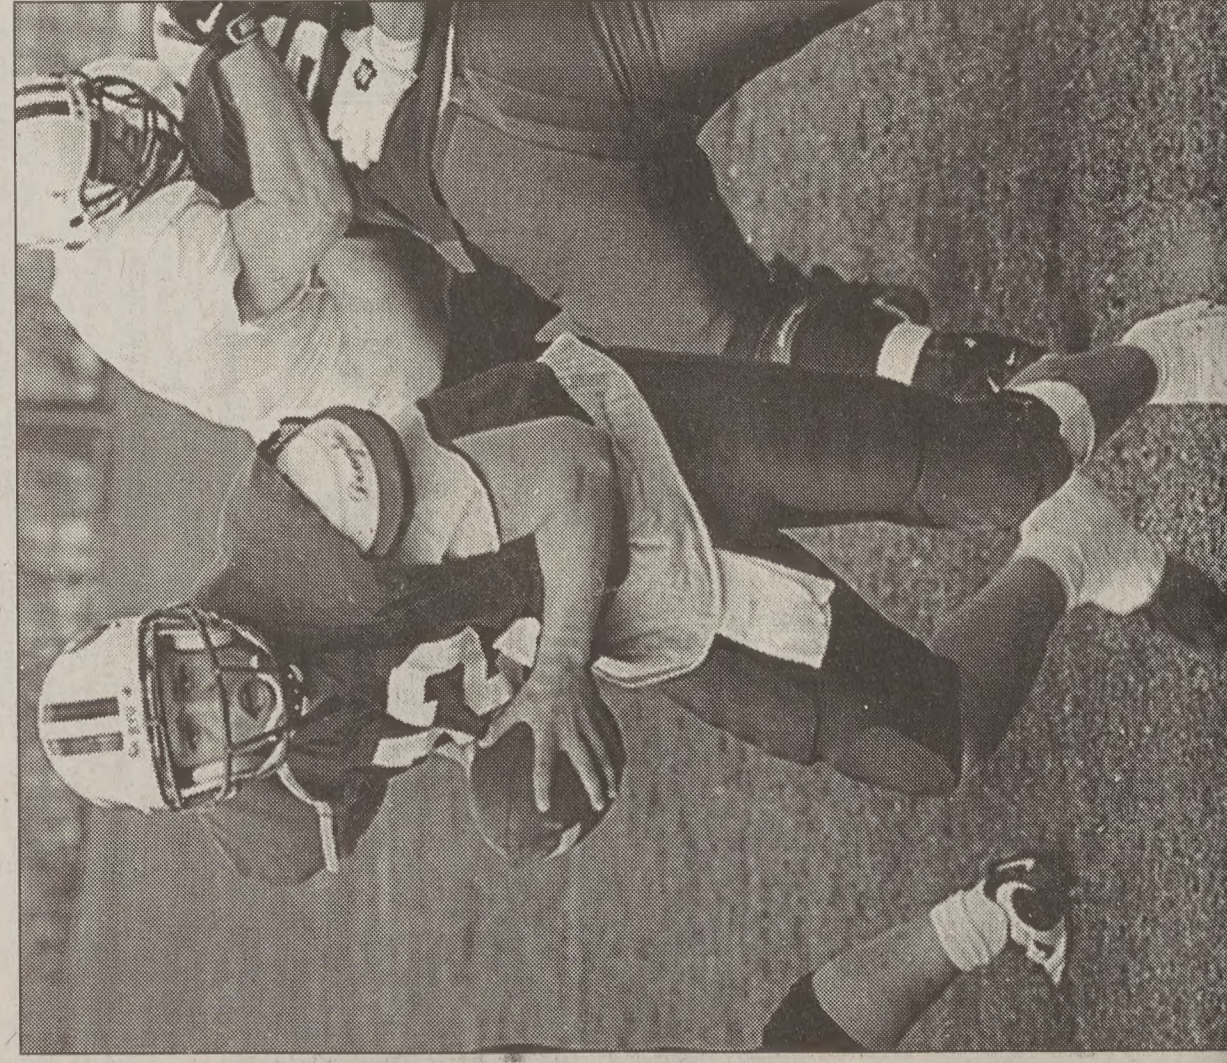

"There is a competition," said quarterback coach Robbie Bosco. "This competition is pressing both to play better."

Miller feels both he and Feterik are being given a fair chance.

"Right now we're both just battling it out, and we'll see what happens," Miller said. "We have to prepare like we're both the guy."

Despite the competition felt both this year and last year for the quarterback position, Miller said everyone remains friends.

"It's competitive, yet we're all good buddies. On the field is one thing, and off the field is another," Miller said.

Wide receiver corps stocked with depth

By JUSTIN ROHATINSKY
justin@du2.byu.edu

No one will be missed by this year's football team more than All-WAC wide receiver Ben Cahoon. But players and coaches are looking forward to this year with excitement.

Offensive coordinator Norm Chow said, "We are excited about the depth that the team has this year in the receiver department and are working hard to get them ready for the season."

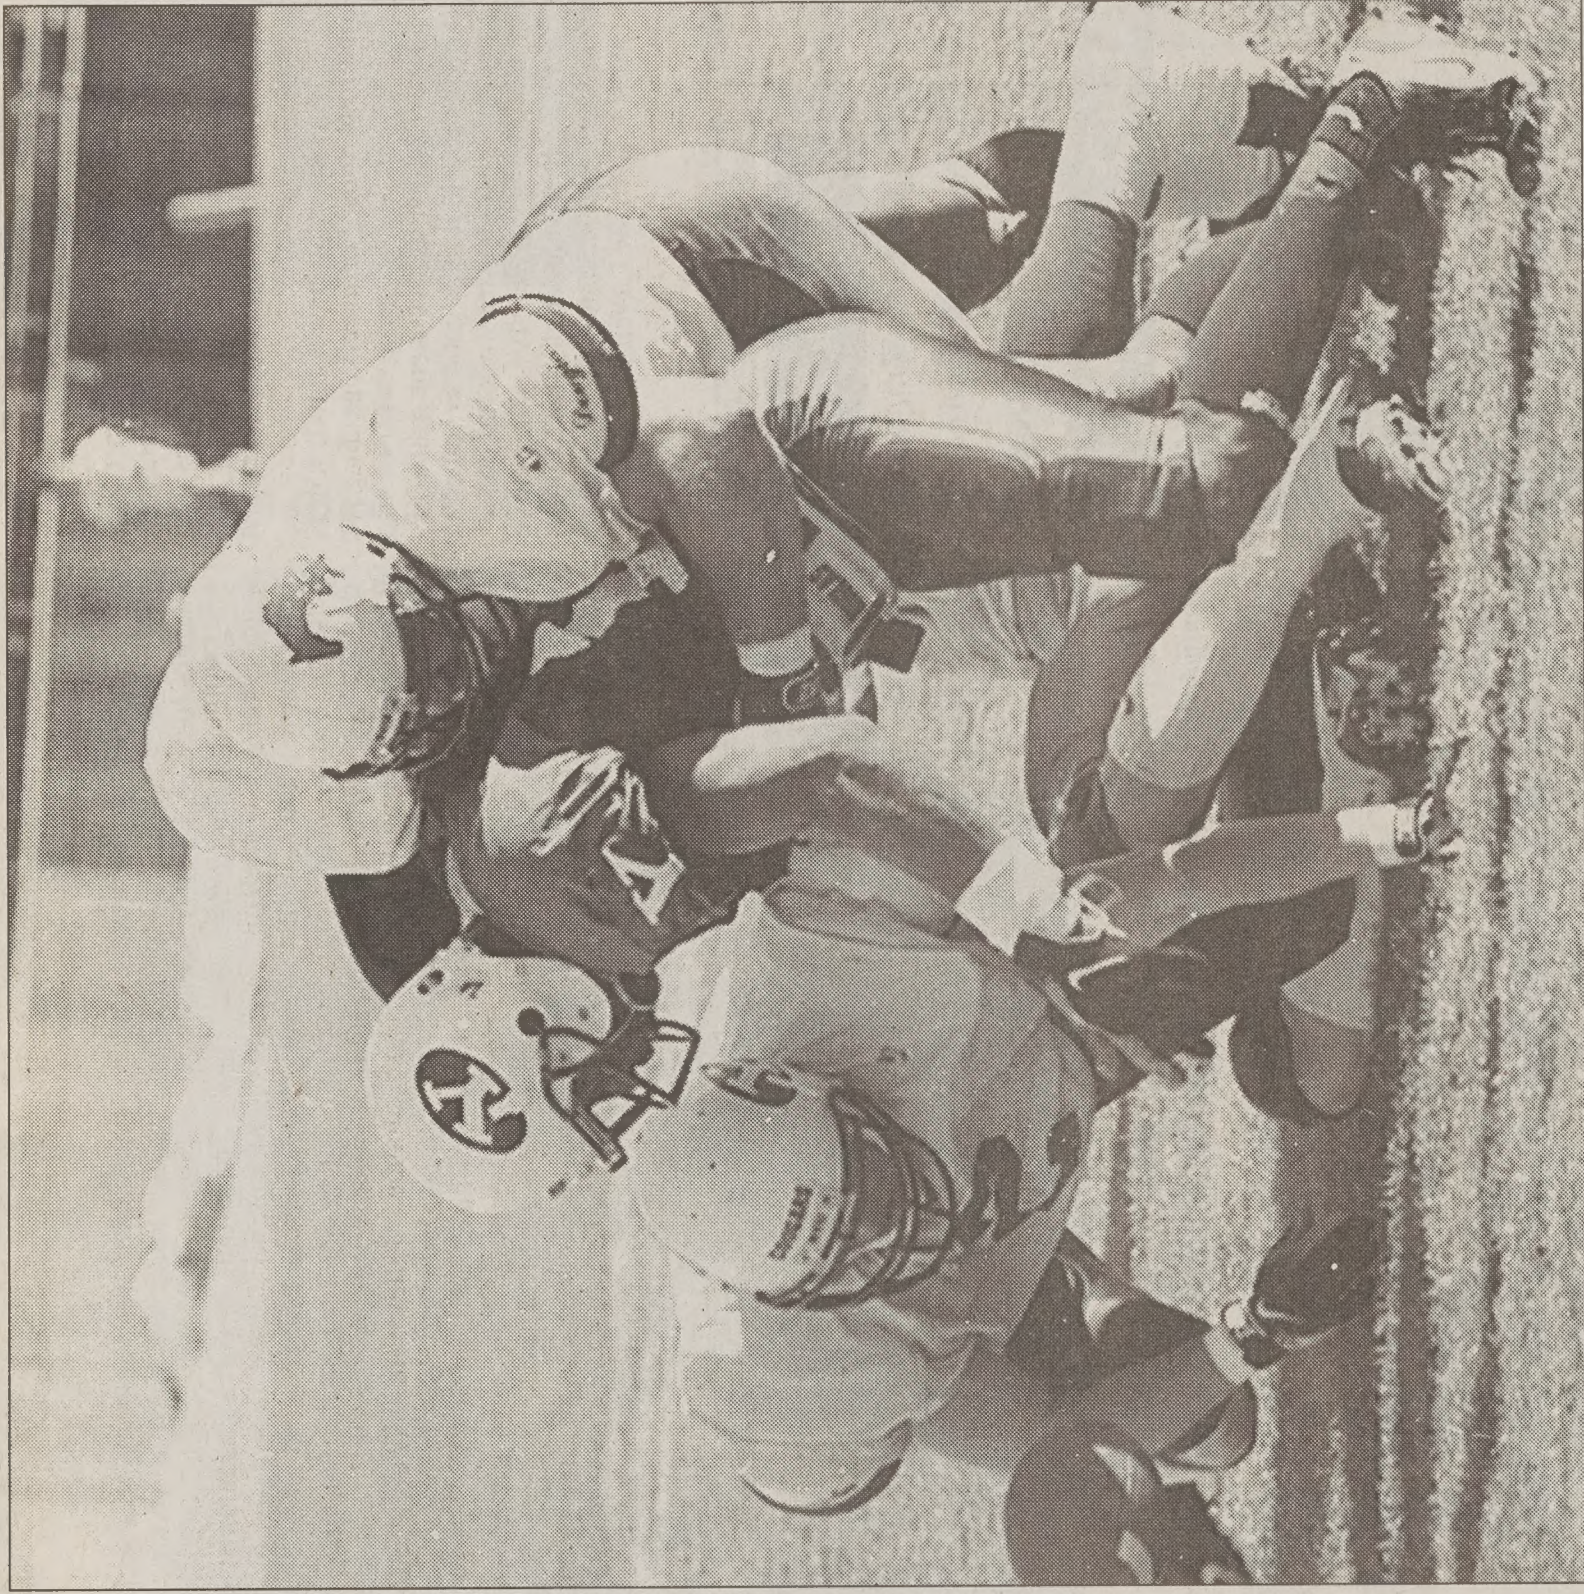

Returning receivers this year include 5-foot-9-inch, 170-pound senior Aaron Roderick, 6-foot-2-inch, 185-pound junior RJ Anderson, and 5-foot-11-inch, 190-pound sophomore Margin Hooks.

There are also some junior college transfers the team is excited about, namely 6-foot, 170-pound Tacomia Fontaine, a transfer from Ranger College in Ranger, Texas, and 6-foot, 170-pound Jonathan Pittman, a transfer from Lakewood, Calif.

Quarterback coach Robbie Bosco said, "Leadership will be a big thing this year with Cahoon gone. The guys need someone to look up to. There is a long way to go, but the leadership will come."

Bosco is excited about a receiver corps he defines as a "good group" and said he is confident it will perform as well as the coaches are expecting it to.

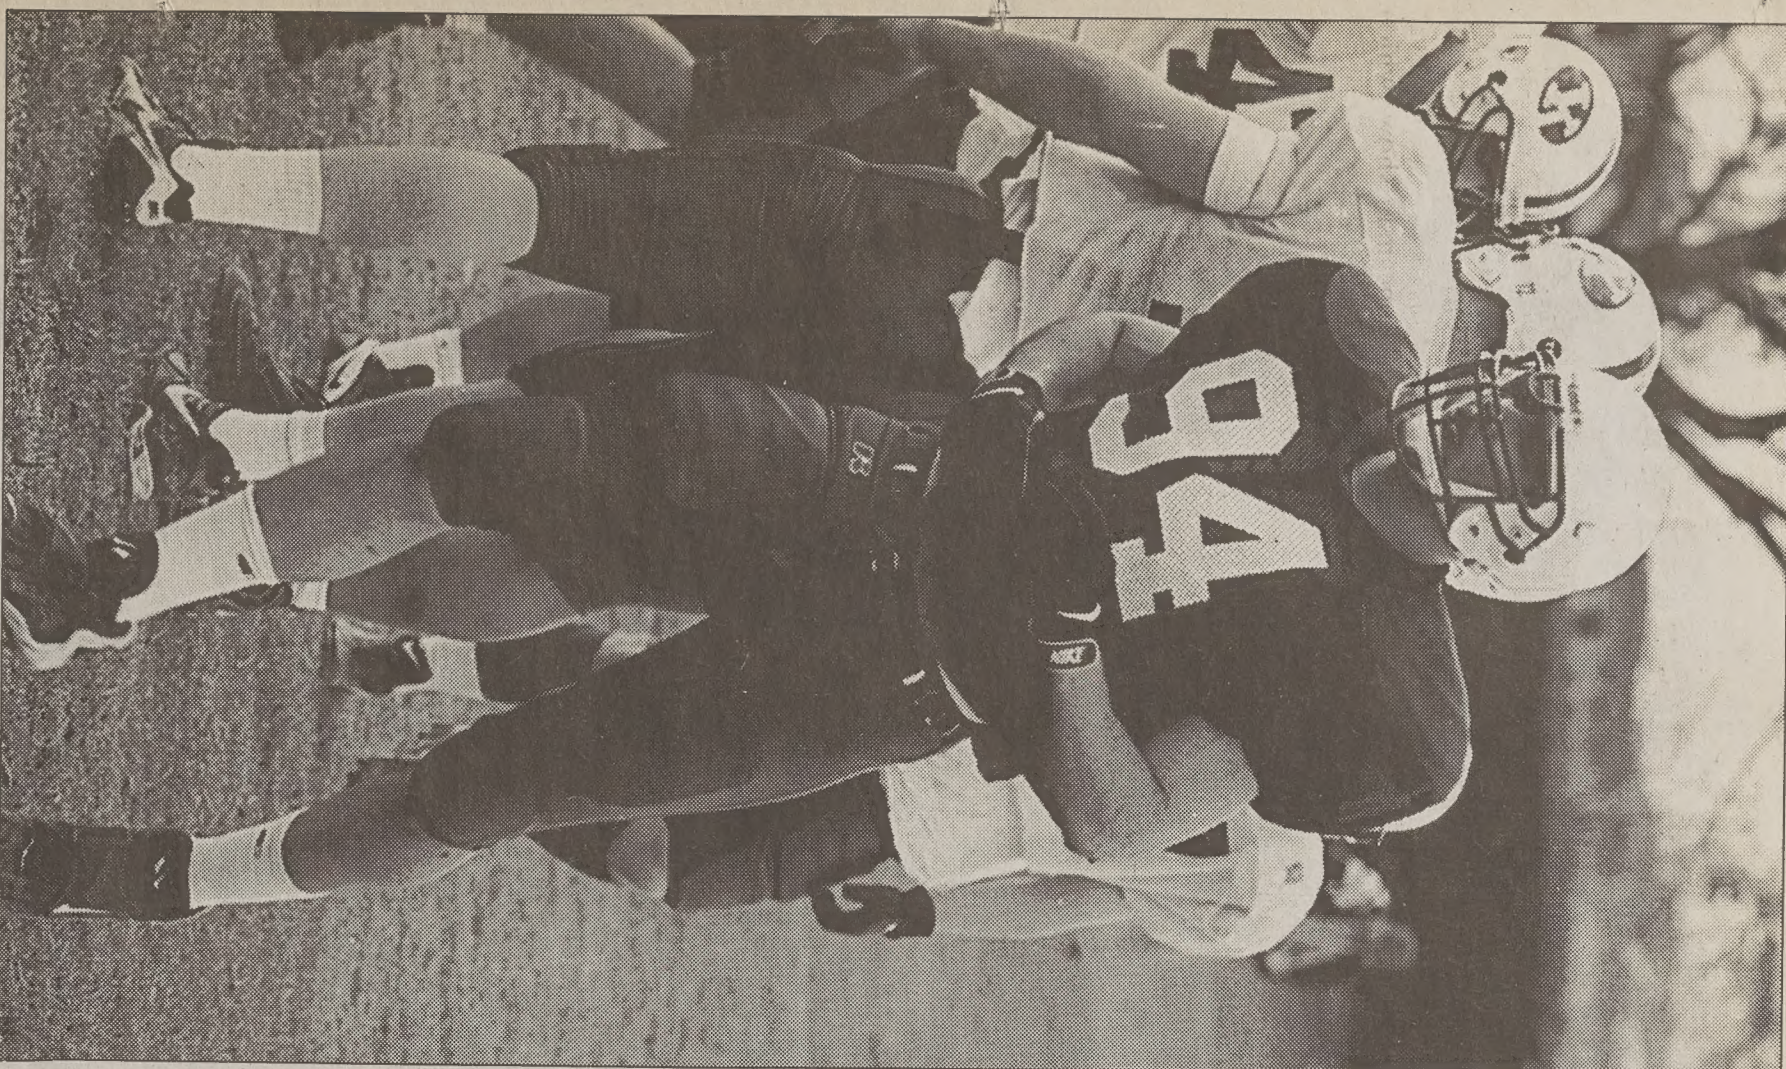

The receivers themselves were excited to talk about this year's team and the added depth present in the area of the team many of them felt was not as prominent last year.

Tight ends add variety to offense

By MELANIE BRIDGE
melanib@du2.byu.edu

Quick, memory association test. Name the first player that comes to mind when you hear the words BYU and tight ends. For most fans, images of Chad Lewis leaping players and Italia Mili diving into the end zone for a game winning catch come to mind. Now add the word 1997 and most fans draw a blank. This year BYU hopes to bring back the tight ends into the center of the action and mix the offensive plays up.

"Last year we never threw that much," said tight end Tevita Ofahengue. "Our coaches like to make people wonder. This year there will be more variety."

There are five players competing for the starting tight end position, and one recruit that will join BYU in the fall. Nate Foreman is a junior on the team, who converted from linebacker two years ago. He switched to take advantage of what he considered a good opportunity.

Last year Foreman was backup tight end to Dustin Johnson. The coaches started him in the first game and it looked like he was going to get a lot of playing time, Foreman said. But in the first 10 minutes of the game he blew out his knee and could not play for the rest of the season.

Now, Foreman is at about 90 percent in his recovery and has been practicing at full speed with the team. It usually takes nine months for full recovery with this type of injury but he is ahead of schedule, Foreman said.

The other tight end that has seen playing time for BYU is Ofahengue. Last year was his first year, and he was just learning the position, said tight end coach Chris Pella. This year both Ofahengue and Foreman are stepping up and actually making a contribution.

"Last year I was fighting for (the position); this year it's mine," Ofahengue said.

Bret Keisel redshirted at tight end last year, so he will play his first games for BYU next season.

"He's doing a nice job at this point," Pella said.

Two players have switched positions this year to take advantage of the holes at the tight end spot. Carlos Nuno was a defensive end last year. "I switched because the coaches gave me a chance to be an asset," Nuno said. "It will be a waste of time if I don't get the opportunity to play."

The last player practicing at the tight end position is redshirt quarterback Doug Jolley.

"(The coaches) said I had a better chance to play, so I went with the chance," Jolley said. "There's a lot more action."

Because he was a quarterback, Jolley feels it helps him read the defenses of other teams. He also knows how the offense at BYU works better.

Transfer Heshimu Robertson, right, prepares to defend Aaron Roderick. Robertson is one addition to BYU's secondary.

Defensive backs hope for year of stability

By SCOTT BELL
Associate Sports Editor
and ANGELA REEVES
Universe Staff Writer

In the pass-happy WAC, there is one way to ensure embarrassment. A weak secondary is sure to translate into a season of touchdown bombs and high scores.

Both of BYU's starting cornerbacks graduated last year, leaving some holes to fill before next season. Omar Morgan graduated after two seasons as an All-WAC performer and is preparing for the NFL draft. Ben Cook departed after starting every game last season.

To fill those holes, the Cougars have turned to the junior college ranks. Heshimu Robertson, a transfer from Centrios Junior College who will only be a sophomore, and Brian Gray, a transfer from El Camino Junior College, will be the principle players called upon to step in and contribute right away.

Robertson is already enrolled in school and practicing with the team. According to cornerback coach Brian Mitchell, Robertson will most likely take over for Morgan at left corner.

At right corner, junior Jack Williams and Gray will get looks at replacing Cook. Williams started one game while Morgan was suspended last year. After Morgan's return, Williams came in as the nickelback in passing situations.

QB factory closed for good?

By CARLON SCOTT

Gifford, Wilson, McMahon, Young, Bosco. For 10 years, one after the other, BYU had a top gun quarterback in the college ranks. While one was reaching his peak in his senior year, rumors would be heard of the next heir to the throne and of the promising signs of his future reign.

When it came time for the next master of the air to step up, the prophecies would always be fulfilled. The record of the football team during those 10 years was an impressive 103-21. The team never finished worse than 8-4.

But then came the dark times — the years of quarterback by committee. 1986 marked the first year the Cougars did not lead the nation in passing since 1978.

Then in the second half of the 1988 Freedom Bowl a new star rose. Ty Deimler began his incredible record-setting career by leading BYU to a 20-17 victory over Colorado. Deimler won the Heisman trophy in 1990.

Since Deimler graduated and moved on in 1991, it's been years of inconsistencies and uncertainties. Ryan Hancock looked like he would continue the great string of quarterbacks. But after an injury, he decided to focus on baseball.

Injuries and inconsistent performances hampered John Walsh during his career.

Steve Sarkisian's first year marked the end of BYU's string of consecutive bowl appearances. Sarkisian redeemed himself in 1996 by leading the team to its most victories ever in a single season and its first New Year's Day bowl appearance.

Last year, the offense hit rock bottom. 1997 was the worst offensive season for the Cougars since 1972 — the year LaVell Edwards started coaching. The team finished with its lowest total offense average, 335 yards per game, and its third-worst passing yards per game average, 227, in the Edwards era.

How the mighty have fallen — but why? After putting together a string of five great quarterbacks, and then landing a Heisman Trophy winner, why has the well suddenly run dry? Why does BYU now have such a difficult time consistently landing quality quarterbacks?

BYU quarterback coach Robbie Bosco thinks the Western Athletic Conference has changed from when he played.

"I think the defenses are getting a little more sophisticated, people are getting bigger, faster, stronger. We used to play some of these teams and beat them pretty good. Now these teams are vying for the (WAC) championship all the time," Bosco said. In addition, Bosco thinks the trend in college football of running the football all game is disappearing.

"I think teams are starting to throw the football a little more ... that's one of the things that drove me to BYU," Bosco said. "When you are talking about throwing the ball 40 to 45 times a game, nobody was doing it like BYU was. Back in those days, we definitely threw the ball more than anybody else."

The statistics confirm Bosco's theories. The average passing yards in a NCAA football game went up from 278 yards in 1979 to 403 yards in 1996. During that same period of time, average rushing yards per game dropped from 375 yards to 328 yards. A quarterback who can pass is in higher demand in college football. In turn, a quarterback who can pass has more schools to choose from. BYU is no longer the only pass-happy college football team around.

College football has changed, and quarterbacks who can throw are becoming scarce and more difficult to recruit.

The other obstacle that BYU faces in finding a quarterback is its offense. While it has been the primary reason for BYU's success, it is also the primary hurdle. Because BYU has one of the most complex offensive systems in college football, it's not easy finding a quarterback who can run it.

Recruiting coach Chris Pella looks for a certain type of high school quarterback.

"Ours has always been an emphasis on the kids that have a passing game intellect, kids that understand coverages and the big picture, more than just how strong their arm is," Pella said.

Evidence of the complexity of BYU's system can be seen in the experience of Sarkisian.

In his first year the offense had a hard time getting on track. The team averaged 411 yards of total offense and was ranked 23rd nationally in that category. The team finished the year 7-4.

In his second season Sarkisian took the offense up to a 478 yard per game average that put them 6th in the nation in total offense. The team finished 14-1.

More than just the yardage alone, Sarkisian had developed a command of the offense. He was able to make the offense work at pivotal times when the team needed a score.

Sarkisian always had the physical skills needed to be quarterback; he just needed to become more familiar with the offense.

The touchdown passes thrown to K.O. Kealalulu at the end of the Texas A&M and Cotton Bowl games were examples of Sarkisian's increased understanding of the offense.

Pella looks for recruits that have been around football all their lives.

"It seems like the Ty Deimers, the Drew Millers, kids whose dads are coaches and have been around the game ... they have really been productive in our offense," Pella said.

The team was successful this off-season in landing a recruit that fits

Junior College wide receiver transfer Tacoma Fontaine talks with a reporter before a scrimmage at Cougar Stadium.

Juco transfers look to contribute

Four junior college transfers have joined the BYU football team for spring drills, filling holes at cornerback, wide receiver and on the offensive line.

Robertson transferred from Cerritos College in Norwalk, Calif., where he was the team's most valuable defensive player and most valuable defensive back.

Junior wide receiver Tacoma Fontaine was chosen the No. 1 JC wide receiver in the country last year. He played at Ranger Junior College in Ranger, Texas, where he led the nation in kickoff returns.

Junior Craig Schmitt played on the offensive line at Ricks College last year where he was Gridwire JC All-American, all-region and all-conference.

Junior John Skiba also played on the offensive line at Ricks where he was chosen All-Region 18 and second team all-conference.

A graduate of Springville High School, Skiba said that he has always wanted to play at BYU.

"We feel we helped ourselves in areas where we needed immediate help," coach LaVell Edwards was quoted as saying in a press release.

Offensive line coach Roger French said he hopes to see all three offensive players step up and fill starting positions.

With his strengths as a wide receiver he hopes he can "bring another threat" to the line-up. Robertson said he feels very prepared for Division I play coming from the Mission Conference.

"The change is just the atmosphere," Schmitt said the plays are similar to those at Ricks so learning them is "not too bad."

That, and the fact that he has a lot of other universities, he said he chose BYU because of the conference.

► MILLER from page 6

"You can't go through a season with just one quarterback. You have to be happy whether you're a starter or not."

Miller said with the absence of Paul Shoemaker, the other quarterbacks will need to pick up some slack.

"Everybody is going to have to step it up more with Paul leaving," Miller said. "Hopefully everyone will stay healthy. We definitely have some good quarterbacks though."

Miller was born in Tacoma, Wash., to David and Sonia Miller. During his years at Lakes High in Lakewood, Wash., Miller shined. He lettered four times in football.

Miller was a two-time honorable mention All-American by USA Today and was selected as one of 70 players to participate in the All-American Bowl high school all-star game.

Miller left his name in the Washington record books as the state's career passing leader with 9,003 yards and 101 touchdowns. He was recruited by Notre Dame, Stanford, Texas, Arizona State, Washington State, SMU, San Diego State, UCLA, Idaho State, Northwestern and Tennessee.

He chose to BYU for several reasons.

"I felt comfortable here," Miller said. "The coaches were stable and I fit in really well with the offense here. BYU's offense let's you throw the ball a lot."

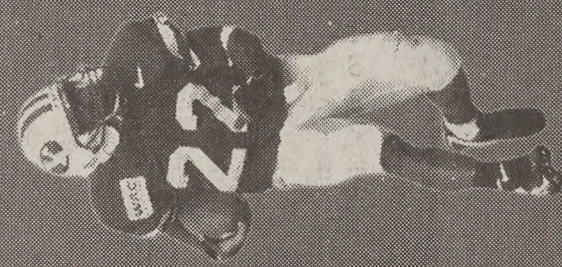

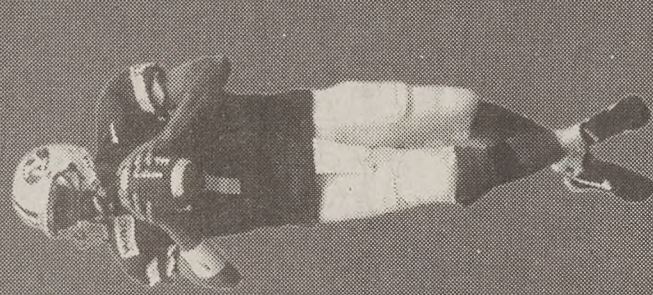

Although some fans say the "quarterback factory" is closed due to the rise of BYU's running game, Miller disagrees.
